CHIEF SECRETARY'S OFFICE

Chief Secretary's Papers

The office of the Chief Secretary was created in the early 1950s. The Chief Secretary was the colonial Governor's executor: he carried on correspondence on behalf of the Governor, received reports, and drafted replies. The topical content of these files is therefore very broad indeed, covering all aspects of the government's work, from education to taxation to foreign relations. They should be read alongside the Secretariat Papers. The provenance of the papers filed under the Secretariat were of a more general character, and cover a broader chronological range. The Chief Secretary's papers are primarily correspondence originating from the Governor's office, or sent to the Governor's office.

Some of these files bear subject markings, suggesting that this series was originally organized along the same lines as the 'Secretariat Topical Collection' (i.e. files concerning the same subject were once kept together, under thematic headings). At some stage—possibly in 1962, when the files in the whole archive were reviewed by departing British administrators—the topical scheme was abandoned, and the files were numbered and boxed in numerical order. This numerical system has been preserved in the current catalogue. Only in rare cases, where no number could be found on the file, was it necessary to add numbers to aid in locating files.

Researchers should read this collection alongside the 'Secretariat Papers', the 'Secretariat Topical Collection', and the 'C Series'. These different series reflect the differing ways in which colonial officials evaluated the confidentiality of the file under review. In many cases politically sensitive correspondence was separated from the public files and placed in the 'C Series', access to which was restricted. Further papers from this series have been located in the recently-opened 'migrated archives' held by the British National Archives (under FCO 141).

This collection was catalogued in two stages, first (in 2011) by a team from the Makerere Institute for Social Research led by Dr. Stella Nyanzi, and latterly (from 2012 to 2014) by staff of the Uganda National Archives, especially Justine Nalwoga and Eva Irene Kirabo.
